John Moores University, Liverpool

The Disability Discrimination Act has led to many buildings having to be made 'access friendly' towards the working disabled population and general public.

Armitage were, after a post tender negotiation period, awarded the contract to design and install a bespoke steel framed Access Ramp featuring stainless steel hand railings and balustrades complimented by a natural Larch Timber Deck complete with non-slip landing areas. The finished construction now provides good accessibility together with an aesthetically pleasing appearance to what was 'just an entrance'.

Internally, a Stair Lift was installed together with the required sympathetic alterations to increase the door widths whilst maintaining the features of this period property. Changes and redecoration of the Roscoe Room at the University were also made to accommodate the new disabled access.
